Dear Readers,

Who would of thought? 200 issues! Who ever said "time flies" wasn't kidding. It was the summer of 1990 when Sound Waves Magazine was conceived. The concept took shape at the Island House in Misquamicut, with help of then owner Rick Morone, and the name was decided over a few drinks one afternoon among friends at the Daniel Packer Inn in Mystic. The first few years was a lesson in publishing a free magazine and trying to pay the bills. Though that lesson is still being taught today! But we have survived! The music scene has changed over the years, and it seems I am calling my nephews and nieces more often on who/what is hot these days. We have had artists of all styles on the cover. Some we interviewed before they became famous and won their Grammys. Still putting together a free publication is a tedious job. The one thing I have learned to do is try and spread the work out over a few days. Those all night trying to meet the deadline days are no more, simply because I can't do it anymore :)

This 200th issue also wouldn't be possible without the people that have been part of it. Mainly people like Ed Roach, who has been with me from day 1. And my writers, who are many and you see in the opposite column. But mostly Bill Harriman, who I consider my main writer and who helps organize the stories and delegate the writing assignments. A lot of us have got grey together over this publication, and enjoyed every minute of it!

But mostly I would like to thank you the readers. Without your support by telling an advertiser that you saw their ad within these pages, we would not be where we are today!

Thank You All & Till Next Month

MUSIC NOTES

"I Might Pitch a Fit, But I Won't Put on My Brakes"

By Mark T. Gould

Let's face it. The late Warren Zevon was, to paraphrase the title prophecy of his greatest hits collection, a musical "genius." He had an unwavering, unique eye for detail; employed a virtually unmatched turn of a phrase; and displayed a wicked sense of humor, all wrapped in and around a poignancy that gave depth and soul to his music.

I mean, who else could make the cattle disease "brucellosis" sound poetic?

He was also, as a recently published, posthumous biography written, with his apparent blessing, by his ex-wife with his two children's input so pointedly reveals, an obsessive compulsive, alcoholic, familial abuser, and a frequently poor and absent parent, who tested and pushed the limits of his friends and family's loyalty and love throughout a far too short life.

Shortly before his death from cancer at age 56 in 2003, Zevon green lighted the biography, called "I'll Sleep When I'm Dead: The Dirty Life and Times of Warren Zevon," published by HarperCollins and organized by his long-suffering, yet equally loving, ex-wife Crystal Zevon. Eschewing the normal narrative form, Zevon's story is told in the words, remembrances, quotations and some serious storytelling by a plethora of friends, including musicians Bruce Springsteen, David Crosby, Jackson Browne, Jorge Calderon (who is the unsung hero, in so many ways, in the book and in Zevon's life) among others; and author friends like Carl Hiaasen (who also wrote the introduction), Dave Barry and Stephen King. Throughout a fascinating more than 400 pages, it paints a sad story of a tortured, and at times torturing, well, musical genius.

Thankfully, though, the other half of the complexity that was Warren Zevon was released simultaneously with the tell-all book, so that fans get, and remember, the complete picture. This part includes the re-release, and in a couple of cases, the first time appearance on compact disc, of some of his classic albums, organized, directed and coordinated by his son, Jordan, and released by Rhino Records.

Put them both together, and, well, you've got one hell of a life. Interestingly, and critically to a study of his art, either one alone, the book or the music, doesn't seem to reveal the complete picture of this troubled, yet immensely talented, man. Digested together, they tell an amazing story.

The re-release of his most popular album, "Excitable Boy" might be more than enough to showcase the musical side, since it contains arguably his most popular, well-known, and, yes, crazed, songs, including "Werewolves of London," "Lawyers, Gun & Money," "Roland The Headless Thompson Gunner," and the title track. Yet, the majesty of his work only reveals itself when those songs are heard alongside the quiet, yet intensively exquisite beauty of "Accidentally Like a Martyr," and "Tenderness On the Block," also included on that record.

The other studio release, heard for the first time on CD, is the underrated "The Envoy," which matches "Boy" for tough rockers like "The Overdraft," "Ain't That Pretty At All," and the title track, paired with the relative solitude of "Never Too Late For Love," "The Hula Hula Boys (vicious as it might be)," and "Let Nothing Come Between You."

Yet, it's the long overdue CD release of Zevon's all but perfect first, full band, live album, "Stand In the Fire," that absolutely showcases the dichotomy, the almost duality, of his musical purpose and personality.

Cut on stage at the Roxy in Los Angeles in 1981, with a virtually unknown, perfectly chaotic, backing band-ironic for a guy who knew, played and wrote with just about every famous musician in southern California at the time-Zevon's madcap performance is so breathtaking and immediate that you feel like you are up there, on stage, sweating along with him. Just like the other two releases, he combines the kick you in the teeth rockers with the glory of the majestic "Mohammad's Radio," and, included as one of a handful of bonus tracks, the gorgeous "Hasten Down The Wind," painting the complete aural picture of a man totally in, and, simultaneously out, of control.

Which brings us back to the book. It took a lot of guts, and, as the book aptly points out, the public relations savvy of a man long in the music business, for Zevon to allow us, his fans, to watch him tragically waste away four years ago. Just as much as it took for him to permit his friends and family to paint the other side of a life that more likely than not gave him the odd fortitude to write and record the breathtaking songs and music that we are, thankfully, left with.

JENNIFER LOPEZ

By Patrik Mallberg
Intro by Bill Harriman

If there is a defining moment in the life of Jennifer Lopez it would have to be the evening of February 23rd, 2000. Jennifer was a presenter at the 43rd annual Grammy Awards and that was the night she wore the green Versace dress. That was the moment she became J-Lo. Whether she won a Grammy that night or not is irrelevant. What is relevant is that on that moment in time she became the hottest women in the world and no babe on any stage or red carpet before or since has ever been hotter.

These days J-Lo is as busy (and as interesting) as always. Her new CD "Como Ama Una Mujer" has been a huge success and she has yet another movie coming out called "Bordertown." In this flick Jennifer plays a journalist investigating a series of murders along the Mexican/American border. Her co-star is the acclaimed actor Antonio Banderas. Last year Jennifer and her husband Marc Anthony co-starred in a movie called "El Cantante" which was based on the life of salsa king Hector Lavoe. Marc also worked with Jennifer on the new CD.

How do you manage so many things keep going on?

Jennifer Lopez: "I try to get a lot of sleep (laughs). I work really hard. But now it's better. I try to take time for myself and relax when I can. The most important thing to me now is my family and home and stuff like that. I try to give all the time I can to that. I really balance it out now."

Tell us about all the things coming up soon...

Jennifer Lopez: "Two albums and two movies. But see, I did it over the past few years. It just happens so that it all is coming out this year. Which is good because I had a couple of years in which I was doing nothing. No promotion – nothing."

When did the "Bordertown" project begin?

Jennifer Lopez: "Greg Nava (director) came to me and said he has this project, and he has been researching and been working on for a few years. And he asked me if I want to do it. And once he told me what it was about I felt like it was my responsibility to try to do make this happen with him. It is such a tragic story and a horrible thing that was still going on. I just felt like I want to do it with him. Right from then we both were two crazy passionate people trying to get this thing done. And we did and I think it's a really important movie."

Through this movie you actually became a colleague of us journalists. Do you understand us better now?

Jennifer Lopez: "You know I understand you guys have your job to do. And I also understand that's the same type of kind of creative outlet in writing and the ambition of finding the truth. I mean that's where my character was really coming from. At first it's the kind of glory and her ambition and for the wrong reasons she wants to be famous, to be kind of a star in her field. And then it comes to what it's really about. A hoping that you can change the world and make it somehow better kind of movie. And that was the journey of this character in this film."

Could you identify with this character?

Jennifer Lopez: "I guess in a way. Because I understand what it is to want to do well in your job, and to have your priorities changed."

How was the cooperation with Antonio Banderas?

Jennifer Lopez: "It was great! I love working with Antonio. He is an amazing actor. And he's one of those intense actors who, when you work with them, you help each other to be better. He had a smaller part in the film, so we didn't get to really do as much as we would have liked. So hopefully we work together again soon."

What are the three most precious things in your life?

Jennifer Lopez: "Probably my family, my faith and my health (laughs)."

What does a regular day look like for you?

Jennifer Lopez: "Well, it depends. We are like gypsies. We do a lot of travelling when we are working. And when we are not working it's kind of like organizing and get ready to work. So we don't really have normal days. When we are at home we try to dedicate our time to being home. We try to nurture that side of our life, seeing family and catching up with friends and getting some quality time together. And on the road we are sitting like with you guys here and doing interviews all day or going to a premier or on a set or in a studio. So it depends. But there's no normal day for me."

The title of the album means in English: How women love... Would you say men will understand the other gender better after listening to your songs?

Jennifer Lopez: "(Laughs) Yeah, what I always say about this album is: What we think women love this way. We think of it more intensely, more passionately, more open, more a different way. To me it's really like this saying: Anybody who has been really in love, loves like a woman. (laughs loudly) You know what I mean? So that was kind of the idea. This is what it's like for women, what we go through. It goes to a lot of different things of being in love, going through a heartbreak, and when you're strong, when you're broken, when you're totally in bliss. There are different kinds of emotions on this album. But I think anybody who is in love could relate to it. Understand woman? I don't know. I don't know if you could ever really totally completely understand women. (laughs)”

Can you tell us something about the songs “Me haces falta,” “Amarte es todo,” and “Apresurate?”

Jennifer Lopez: “‘Me haces falta’ means basically ‘I miss you.’ But your presence is just missed. The song is basically about I’m just angry about myself because I made this happen. And now I just want to get you back. And ‘Amarte es todo’ is basically about being in love. Basically the act of love is everything to me, being able to love you. It’s still a complete and total feeling. And the other one ‘Apresurate’ is about wanting being a part from the person you want to be with.”

In one song we can hear you with Marc Anthony...

Jennifer Lopez: “Number 6 is called ‘Por Arriesgarnos.’ Actually it was the first song we were recording for the album. It didn’t start out as a duet. I sang the first voice in it. There was a second voice, a harmony, a man’s voice. So Marc said ‘I sing it, I’ll do it,’ because he was in the studio with me and he sings (laughs) and he was producing the album. I just love the way our voices sound together. I just kept saying ‘put his voice up more’ because it was really barred in the track, like a harmony part, and I said ‘no, put it up some more, some more, blend them together!’ Eventually it just became a duet.”

Do you like parts of your family being at your work?

Jennifer Lopez: “You know it’s funny. You have like creative soul mates. People you have really good chemistry with, whether it’s directors or songwriters. Marc and I, he’s the one singer I keep singing with over and over again, even when we work. And there are just people in your life where you just have that natural chemistry.”

How were the recording with your husband?

Jennifer Lopez: “It was funny for me actually, because it was the first time that I wasn’t in control of the whole thing. He was really in charge. He produced the album, he was going to find the right sound. So it was kind of like a different experience for me that way. We had a good time and it was beautiful. And what we created we were really happy with. It was a lot of fun in this sense for us, it was fulfilling.”

Is there more Spanish sounds coming up in future?

Jennifer Lopez: “I would describe it as: I have an English album coming out in September. And the stuff I have done in English is like pop, dance and r & b. And that describes the way I am. This is Jenny from the block, the girl from the Bronx. But there is also this other side of me: This girl from Puerto Rico who has this cultural background. And this side almost nobody gets to see, the private side with the vulnerable, sentimental and romantic person. This Spanish album was the chance to express this side of me. I’d just say that I make different music in Spanish than I do in English. And I will continue to follow that line. The album coming out later this year will still be J. Lo as everyone knows her.”

Did you discover anything new by working on that album?

Jennifer Lopez: “My standards have changed by making this album. It was also the first time that it took my three years to

JAMES BLACKSHAW

"The Cloud of Unknowing" Tompkins Square

The term "post-rock" has become so stale that by now it might just be impossible to digest. While few would deny that Talk Talk and Godspeed You Black Emperor have created albums that deserve creative labels, a genre that dubs itself the phoenix rising from rock's nonexistent ashes feels inflated; no matter how captivating its style, music that defines its value through comparison with another kind less diminishes its opponent than enlarges it. "Post-rock" defines its practitioners as subordinates, creators not of independent works but as supplements, and in so doing unfairly reduces their grandiosity to bombast. It encourages condescension, and over time Talk Talk have been nearly forgotten as the inspiration for every would-be pop band that hopes to harness a full orchestra.

James Blackshaw doesn't play with an orchestra, but he does stack his virtuosic 12-string guitar recordings into such thick arrangements that each feels deserving of a cathedral. The 25-year old virtuoso, already the possessor of an impressive six-album resumé, treats his instrument as an endlessly adaptable creature; throughout The Cloud of Unknowing he harnesses so many different registers that he tempts us to compare his work with that of his epic contemporaries. At its heart, though, The Cloud of Unknowing is an ornamented version of the consummate classical guitar album, and Blackshaw has created nothing less than a symphony of a single instrument.

Opener "Bite Down Hard" immediately establishes the album's spiritualism; Blackshaw's fluttering fingers produces a soothing progression strongly resembling those normally played on a harp. Soon a strikingly similar bassline—one that less supplements the melody than mirrors it—joins in to provide resonance, sandwiching more amplified plucks between layers of ecumenical treble. This arrangement continues with little to no addition or subtraction for over ten minutes—apparently Blackshaw wanted to bookend his album with his two longest tracks (closer "Roja (Eyes Similar Blue)" clocks in at a full fifteen minutes). "Little Backstabber" picks the album up again: incantatory taps of his bass strings accompany tinkling bells and faintly audible violins, creating a variegated texture the album has thus far lacked. Token experimental track "Who's Gonna Drop That Bomb" delivers four minutes of hushed, haunted static, accompanied by pentatonic steps that translate serenity into suspense. "Convenient" deepens the newly darkened mood with a minor-key rendition of "Bite Down Hard," now using a prominent bassline to provide urgency instead of ease. "Roja (Eyes Similar Blue)" returns to calmer straits: sixteenth- and thirty-second-note flourishes garnish a soup of rippling treble before the track gives way to the fuzz that characterized "Who's Gonna Drop That Bomb," ending the album on a decidedly eerie note that, like its predecessor, doesn't seem to fit with the album as a whole.

Blackshaw has already proved that he can produce albums of great technical complexity; his newest trick, that of likening his guitar's sound to that of other instruments, adds emotional complexity as well. The result is an interesting experiment: a one-man show that demonstrates in under half an hour that technical sophistication and emotional depth don't have to be mutually exclusive.

MS MARCI & THE LOVESICK HOUNDS

"After Last Call"

Marci Chevan-Hooper got her musical start as a member of the junior choir in her Baptist church as a youngster growing up in Worcester, Massachusetts. Having formed a musical duo at the age of 12 and fronting a full band by 16, "Ms Marci" had later graduated to regularly guest with none other than the late, great Muddy Waters. Other musical collaborations included the likes of legendary blues artists James Cotton, Chuck Berry, and Bo Diddley. Now bassist and lead vocalist of her own rhythm and blues band, "After Last Call" is the third recording effort from Ms Marci & the Lovesick Hounds.

"After Last Call" delivers over 50 minutes of music on 11 displayed tracks plus two additional hidden tracks. Band members include husband Jim Hooper (handling rhythm and lead guitar chores for the Lovesick Hounds for a dozen years now), Dayne Laskey (keyboards), Brandt Bedard (guitar), Lyn Ryan-Porter (saxophone), and John Bruce (drums). Well connected in the blues industry, Marci also invites plenty of special guest help on selected tracks. "After Last Call" offers plenty of variety with a strong R&B foundation. "One Step Forward, Two Steps Back" packs a soulful punch from start to finish, driven by searing guitar licks and melodic horns. "Ladies Man" is a fitting musical tribute to the 92 year-old blues legend Pinetop Perkins. And "Perfumed Garden" expands the boundaries of traditional blues with a more Celtic feel. All 13 tracks are original compositions (although "Ode to the Red Sox", one of the two hidden tracks, borrows much of its structure from Janis Joplin).

The Lovesick Hounds display a wide variety of musical styles, ranging from rhythm and blues to swing to up-tempo jazz. "After Last Call" delivers plenty of horn-driven swing to support of Marci's soulful voice and jump bass lines, a formula that produces fine results. With stellar endorsements from none other than Pinetop Perkins and Bo Diddley, "After Last Call" is already on target to capture the attention of blues music fans.

YOUNG NEAL & THE VIPERS

"Live"

The Vipers have always been one of the regions' very best live bands, so the long-awaited recent disc simply titled "Live" from Neal Vitullo and his bandmates will be a welcome addition to any blues rock musical collection. Recorded live in one take from Theodore's in Springfield, "Live" is jam packed with the all the vibrato bends and twists of Vitullo's soulful six string, accompanied by the rock solid rhythm section of Hub O'Neil (bass) and Mike Labelle (drums). "Live" allows the listener to hear the Vipers doing what they do best; playing live blues music.

The Vipers musical catalog is comprised of many ingredients. Most unique about Vitullo's guitar style is the heavy dose of rockabilly legends like Eddie Cochran incorporated into the traditional blues-based rhythms the likes of T-Bone Walker, Albert King, and Albert Collins. Those familiar with the Vipers live catalog will appreciate capturing the band's bar room staples like "Linda Lu", Joe Turner's "Flip, Flop, & Fly", and "Honey Hush" on disc. These songs feel almost customer-designed for the likes of Vitullo, who attacks his '58 Stratocaster in admiral fashion on every note. "Treat Her Right", driven by O'Neil and Labelle's thumping rhythms, is a standout track delivered with enthusiasm from the very first note. And the self-penned "Guitar King Shuffle", a part of Vitullo's playlist for over 20 years, fully demonstrates the encyclopedia of blues music influences delivered as only Neal Vitullo can deliver. With 16 tracks and over 74 minutes of music, "Live" offers a healthy dose of authentic music packing a powerful blues punch.

It's fitting that the review of the Vipers disc appears in the 200th issue of South Waves Magazine, since Neal Vitullo and company have been an integral part of the magazine and of the blues music scene in Southeastern Connecticut during that time. "Live" finds Young Neal & the Vipers in fine form, playing their hearts out the way true American music should be heard.

RICHMOND FONTAINE

"Thirteen Cities"

Décor Records

Is earnestness dead? Fourteen years after Slanted and Enchanted introduced America to the power of tongue-in-cheek rock, an astute social critic might be forgiven for thinking his world is drowning in irony; these days even the credits on your average slice of artifice don't say what they mean. With the rise of red-state conservatism and a pop-music landscape dotted with bubblegum trees and houses built from Uzis, truth-telling has lost its allure on the [well-stalked] streets of Williamsburg. Country was never In, but now it's something more than Out. People say what they think you want (you think) to hear. Understand? If you don't, there's an army of avid McSweeney's readers and die-hard American Apparel fans willing to show you the light.

It makes sense, then, that only musicians of an older generation can produce alt-country as baldly plain and structurally traditional as that found on Richmond Fontaine's Thirteen Cities. The band's most prominent press photo features four middle-aged men who appear thoroughly uncomfortable in front of a lens; only vocalist Willy Vlautin can handle a direct stare into the camera's eye, while his three comrades stare off into the distance (a choice that appears, based on their rigid poses, imposed on them by the cameraman). Their music is similarly unaffected: Vlautin's creaky warble reminds one of an edgeless Tom Waits, Jeff Tweedy minus the lilt, while Paul Brainard's bright guitar and Sean Oldham's spare drums echo Uncle Tupelo's lighter moments. Spread out over twelve songs, such levity stacks up: Thirteen Cities is an album to knit to, a scenic stroll through one man's pantheon of regrets.

Opener "The Border" introduces us immediately to Vlautin's isolation—eerie synthesized wails and light piano pings dovetail, lulling us into complacency before "Moving Back Home #2" re-supplies our energy with pit orchestra horns and hurried, rollicking drums pick up our feet. "I'm living in my Mom's basement again," sings Vlautin, proclaiming his album's informality along with his own destitution. "$87 and a Guilty Conscience That Gets Worse The Longer I Go" continues the confessional narrative; from here on the band consciously develops the album's primary theme, a journey through thirteen locales that collectively shake Vlautin from his stupor. Eventually he suffers a breakdown: "Lost In This World," the closer and perhaps the album's best track, rests childishly sincere lyrics ("I fucked up again/I barely know where I am") on a bedrock of gentle piano to provide an elegant, quiet coda to Vlautin's journey. This is an album as elliptical as it gets; both structurally and instrumentally, Thirteen Cities establishes a familiar template early on and rarely deviates.

This repetition can grate, but more often than not it produces exactly the kind of comfort one listens to country to hear. In "The Disappearance of Ray Norton" Vlautin describes his nostalgia with the simplest of details: "It was like it happened one day/I was walking down the street and all the storefronts had Mexican names/It was like the whole neighborhood had changed." Delivered in a loping, drawling ramble, such sentiment makes a direct grab for our own senses of transience, forswearing complex lyrics in favor of bar-napkin poetry. You won't find anything different on Thirteen Cities, but that might be the album's greatest strength: sincerity breeds sincerity, and so we can't help but be charmed by a sweetness that never loses its flavor.

do an album. Marc told me a lot about letting things sit for a while. And letting them grow and letting art breathe. Not everything has to be done today. If it's not coming just let it go and come back in two months. When he said this I freaked out like, 'but I want to finish it and listen to it tomorrow!' Then he says 'no, we're not gonna do that.' And that's actually right. That taught me to chill for a minute. I learned a lot in a lot of different levels by that. On my English album I took the same approach. I've been working on it for a year and a half now. And by working that way it gives me a new way of looking at music. And having a new standard of what I accept and what I won't accept musically."

Are there better ways to describe emotions in Spanish than in English?

Jennifer Lopez: "I really do think so. It's a kind of more poetic and descriptive language. It's one of the romantic languages and just by nature it sings in a different way and has more of a dramatic quality. It's just more emotional. At least it can be. It depends on what type of music you want to make. And it was great to get into that because I've never been able to do that before in English. I've done some beautiful ballads but this was like taking it all the way."

'Bordertown' has a political background. Is it important to take responsibility in that way as an artist?

Jennifer Lopez: "I think you have to do what you feel. I will not sit here and preach and tell other people what they should or should not be doing. For me it was important, when I found out about it, that I want to do this movie. For me it was something important that needed to be said. That's what art is for - to explore things. To push them on and do different things. So if you feel something in your heart you should do it."
