MAILBAG

Dear Readers,

Well it's been awhile since I did the mailbag. This summer was so busy that there wasn't any room for it. The magazine is printed by pages of 4, and there was no justification to do the extra pages to include this section. I'm hoping in the near future I will also be able to bring back the "Rant" column. There has been so much happening in the world that I could probably do a whole separate magazine just on the ranting!

I hope everyone had a great summer. There was a lot to do, and the weather was very cooperative. The only problem was is that it seemed to go by too fast! I was a little stubborn about it ending (wearing shorts and going to Sandy Point when it was cold), and eventually paid for it with a nice cold. Being a little under the weather at "crunch" time is not fun. Though the Grand Mariner did help!

Some of you might have noticed that the magazine is now Volume 18, number 2! Sound Waves Magazine is going on 18 years and we have remained a free publication! This has been possible because of you the readers. So keep up the great support and remember to tell our advertisers within these pages that you saw their ad here! Check out the venues and our new and growing restaurant section and enjoy what this area has to offer.

Till next month

ZANNY PARKER

formerly Singer for Eight To The Bar

On Friday, October 12, Eight To The Bar's wonderful former lead singer, Zanny Parker, passed away after a 3-year fight with Ewing's Sarcoma. Her courage and positive attitude was just remarkable. She was in Nashville, TN at the time but there will be an event in her memory to be announced here in Connecticut.

Founder Cynthia Lyon is very anxious to locate a copy of the ETTB video she was in, "Behind the Eight Ball". She needs to make some dubs of it for her relatives and can't locate a single copy! So if anyone has a copy of it on video would you please contact her immediately. You can email at ettb2@comcast.net.

Thanks for your help.

MUSIC NOTES

All Dylan, All The Time

By Mark T. Gould

You know, you'd think that a 66-year-old musician, having published a partial, dreamlike biography, released still another magnificent album, and toiled as a satellite radio disk jockey might just take a little time off, but, then, he just wouldn't be Bob Dylan, would he?

If all those projects weren't enough, there's a new biopic movie of his life, starring no less than seven actors, including a woman (!); a DVD of his seminal Newport Folk Festival performances from the mid-Sixties, a jam-packed, triple CD greatest hits disk, and an absorbing, detailed account of his now four-decades old, essentially unreleased but much heralded "Basement Tapes," project, written by a fellow musician and, clearly, fan of his work.

Oh, yeah, did I also mention that he recently completed his fourth trek of this year's installment of his "Never Ending Tour," encompassing some 78 live shows in North America, Europe, New Zealand and Australia?

And, if that's not enough, he just released a very, funky, atmospheric spoken word advertisement for Cadillac, one of his radio sponsors.

How old did I say this guy is? Wow. Life is indeed full, and grand, for the poet laureate of our generation, who continues aging like a fine wine and, as such, is far more productive, and, need we say, provocative, than other artists less than half his age.

The movie, "I'm Not There," opening in limited release on November 21, and directed and co-written by Oscar-nominated Todd Haynes, is a concept piece as unique as the man himself. Among the actors portraying Dylan at various points in his life are Christian Bale, Richard Gere and, yes, Cate Blanchett, the latter of whom won Best Actress honors at the Venice Film Festival for her performance. The theatrical release coincides with a soundtrack of artists as varied as Eddie Vedder, Willie Nelson and Sonic Youth covering Dylan's songs.

The movie's title track, "I'm Not There" is one of the oft bootlegged nuggets from Dylan's historic, and sometimes histrionic, days in 1967 in Woodstock, where, while recuperating from a motorcycle accident, he wood shedded with fellow musicians who later became The Band, and recorded the breath taking, classic "Basement Tapes." Including such chestnuts as "I Shall Be Released," "Nothing Was Delivered," "Sign on the Cross," "This Wheel's On Fire," "Tears of Rage," and a host of others, Dylan and The Band, ironically without releasing a single note to the public at that time, single-handedly turned the psychedelic music world on its over-bloated head.

While the mysterious project has spawned a number of books that are frequently just as jumbled and sprawled as some of the song takes, the rumor is separated from the saga of these essential recordings in "Million Dollar

Bash," by musician/author Sid Griffin. Reading it, you will see that it took a fellow talented musician to finally make ultimate sense, and context, of what some have called the greatest series of recordings in the 20th century.

Griffin, whose writing (he wrote what still, for my money, is the definitive Gram Parsons biography) may only be bested by his musicianship (his Long Ryders, along with the Blast-ers, may have been the best, and certainly most underrated, band of the Eighties, and his current cohorts, the Coal Porters, aren't far behind), is, by far, the right writer to finally put these recordings in their proper musical and historical surroundings.

Carefully and lovingly etched out in a track-by-track annotation, surrounded by an indispensable historical context of Dylan, The Band and the times they were recorded, Griffin's "Bash," unlike virtually every other book-and there have been many-about these recordings, makes perfect sense of the meaning, both obvious and hidden, of this treasure trove of recordings.

Two wonderful companions of that historical context that Griffin so wonderfully textures are the simply titled "Dylan," a three-disc career retrospective of his commercial recorded work, including a couple of reworked "Basement" songs, and "The Other Side of the Mirror," a video history of Dylan's performances in the early Sixties at the Newport Folk Festival, including the historic, time-stopping electric show in 1965, compiled by Academy Award winning director Murray Lerner.

If, for some reason, you've been underneath a rock for the past, oh, 45 years or so, the discs trace Dylan's recorded career from the earliest folk days, typified by "Song to Woody," his "finger-pointing" protest period, including "Blowin' The Wind," "Masters of War," and "The Times They Are A-Changin'," the transformation to electric music, as masterfully shown on the DVD, featuring the genre-blowing "Like a Rolling Stone," his rejection of icon status and the subsequent homespun fever of "Lay Lady Lay," and "If Not For You," his "conversion" to Christianity, with "Gotta Serve Somebody" and "Precious Angel," and his staggering trinity of work in the past few years, encompassing "Not Dark Yet," "Things Have Changed," and "When the Deal Goes Down."

All of these projects are as mercurial, lacerating, and thought-provoking as the man himself.

Like Dylan. Only Dylan.

SLEEPLESS ANGEL'S

By Don Sikorski

With a guitar playing history dating back to the early age of 4, blues-rock ace Joe Bonamassa is now a seasoned music veteran at the young age of 30. The accomplishments and awards keep piling up for Bonamassa, whose 2007 season included being honored as "Best Blues Guitarist" by Guitar Player Magazine and the release of "Sloe Gin", his seventh effort as a solo artist and fourth on his own J&R Adventures music label. Produced by Kevin Shirley (again on board following "You & Me" which also debuted at #1 on the Billboard charts) and inspired by Rod Stewart's 1969 debut solo recording "The Rod Stewart Album", "Sloe Gin" delivers healthy doses of melodic rock, heavy blues, and acoustic finger-picking that blend together with painted perfection.

Bonomassa brings both fire and fluidity to the guitar, belting out everything from traditional Delta blues to classic rock with a ferocity that would make the founding Fathers of the blues proud. His ability to reconstruct a cover song, tearing it down and rebuilding it in his own image, sets Bonamassa apart from his six string peers. "Sloe Gin" features eleven tracks, covering "One of These Days" (Alvin Lee and Ten Years After), Bad Company's "Seagull" from the band's 1974 debut album, and a hard driving rendition of John Mayall's "Another Kind Of Love". The slower-paced material is where Bonamassa really differentiates himself as a singer and performer. The self-penned "Richmond" is an engaging and comforting conclusion to the disc, while Charles Brown's "Black Night" and the title track are deep, dark blues at its very best. Bonamassa continues to carve his own identity into the musical tree. He also gives back to the community by virtue of his "Blues in the Schools" program, designed at educating young students about the history and influence of blues music. SOUND WAVES MAGAZINE recently caught up with Joe Bonamassa to discuss the new disc and the current tour that will visit the area in November.

SOUND WAVES: The new CD "Sloe Gin" is terrific and I know you've done a couple of tour dates already. Can you tell me how this tour has been going so far?

JOE BONAMASSA: The tour is going really, really good. I can't complain. The turnouts have been really wonderful and we're doing a lot of bigger venues.

SW: I really enjoy the new disc and the acoustic influences. When you write, do you purposely try to go in a specific direction and if so, did it turn out the way you envisioned?

JB: Yeah, I had a concept of not repeating myself on this album. It definitely turned out the way I wanted to and then some. It took on a life of its own that I never envisioned, and a lot of that had to do with (Producer) Kevin Shirley.

SW: Did you accomplish what you had set out to do?

JB: Yeah, it definitely earned me a new genre of fan and also kept my old fans, which is important. It took off right away (Bonamassa's "Sloe Gin" is currently #1 on the Billboard Blues Chart).

SW: I hear a lot of Led Zeppelin III and its acoustic influences mixed in with blues and I've also read that you were influenced by Rod Stewart's debut album. Did you set out to do something along those lines?

JB: The first Rod Stewart album was a big influence. It would be a match up between the heavy blues and the acoustic music. The acoustic music was really intriguing; it was a really great mix.

SW: Do you enjoy playing acoustic?

JB: I do. It's a different thing for me. I think I'm a more original acoustic guitar player than I am an electric guitar player.

SW: How about the song selection on the disc. Two songs that I especially liked were "Seagull", one of my favorite songs from (Bad Company's) Paul Rodgers which I thought was a terrific rendition, and the other was "Around the Bend", which appears on a previous album. Tell me about those two selections.

JB: "Seagull" was something that I did live for a little bit and I thought it would be cool to put on an album. And "Around The Bend" was a song that I did for "Had To Cry Today" that I really, after I got done doing it (the first time); literally felt I ruined a perfectly good song.

SW: It sounds like you felt better about your second run of the version which you've slowed down. It reminds me of a "Goin' To California" influence. Great work on that one.

JB: Thank you.

SW: You're currently touring to support the new album. What are we going to see on this tour in terms of material?

JB: Predominantly stuff from "Sloe Gin" and "You & Me" (Bonamassa's 2006 release). We've also been skipping a few records and going way back to the early records.

SW: I'm looking forward to it. You also have a new band with you.

JB: Yeah. Bogie Bowles (Drums) has been with me for about two years. Carmine Rojas is the legendary bass player that's played with Rod Stewart and David Bowie. And Rick Melick (Keyboards) is also a pretty legendary guy from Australia. So I've got a good bunch of ringers with me, and they kind of keep me grounded.

SW: What about some of the equipment you'll be using. I saw in an interview that your Dad was a vintage-type guitar guy. What type of guitars do you play that we'll see on this tour?

JB: Mostly Les Pauls on this tour. And I bring a fair amount of cool looking gear because the older stuff breaks down.

SW: Do you consider yourself a collector? How many guitars do you own?

JB: A couple hundred guitars.

SW: OK, I guess you do enjoy searching out guitars. Going back to your early beginnings, I read with interest that you began playing the guitar at age 4. Were your parents' musical?

JB: Yeah, my Dad played guitar and was a music dealer. My parents were a big influence on my music.

SW: And then by an early age, you had already earned the attention of people like B.B. King. Did you realize, at that time, how significant the situation was and who you were with, or were you just too young to know the size of the stage you were on?

JB: It was six in one, half dozen in the other. To me, a lot of those early guys that I met were just cool guys. Today, a lot of those guys have passed on, and I feel very, very lucky to have met them.

SW: What drove you to your style of blues-rock music? How did you come about going in that musical direction?

JB: It was just something that I really liked. For me it became a very powerful style of music. It just hit me, and I kept going back and listening to it more and more and more.

SW: It's refreshing to hear a young artist like yourself going in that direction versus the mainstream sound that there's too much of today.

JB: I'm not a mainstream kind of guy.

SW: I really like the direction you've gone in.

JB: Kids today, with their rock and roll, they're angry for no reason.

SW: What types of music do you listen to and what is your opinion of other types of music that we don't see you play?

JB: I listen to everything from Prog Rock to System of a Down. I like some of Kayne West's stuff that he puts out; I think that's pretty creative. Not many people would think that of me.

SW: Next you went to a band called "Bloodline". Tell me a little bit about that experience and what you learned from it?

JB: Well, Bloodline was a big learning experience for me. It was a situation where I learned what to do and I learned what not to do. And I'm lucky enough it didn't kill my career.

SW: As a solo artist, the one change, beside you guiding the direction you go in, is your vocal duties. I think that you've continued to grow as a singer and just keep getting better and better with each disc. Do you work at your vocals?

JB: Yeah, I take a lot of formal lessons.

SW: Do you enjoy singing?

JB: I enjoy singing when everything is working. I hate it when my voice is bad and I sing wrong. There's nothing more lonely than two little muscles (vocal chords) costing you the entire show.

SW: And how about the guitar? Do you have a routine where you practice formally?

JB: Yeah, I'm actually practicing today.

SW: How do you feel that you've evolved as a player since those early days in Bloodline?

JB: I think I'm a lot more worldly as a player and I've taken things from a lot more places and my mind is a lot more open. I'm not so fixated on doing half-assed impersonations of my heroes. I'm more fixated on doing my own phrasing style and coming up with some of my own original stuff.

SW: As a compliment, I can hear a guitar solo now and tell that it's Joe Bonamassa. Do you still enjoy playing as much as you did 10 or 15 years ago?

JB: You know, it's become different now. Playing has become a means to an end. It's not just about playing anymore. There's a lot more of the business aspect that creeps up when you're 30 than it did when you're 17. I think my New Year's resolution for next year is going to be trying to get back and just play some more and try to forget about some of the other stuff that's going on.

SW: What keeps you inspired to continue playing and to keep growing as an artist when you've accomplished so much already?

JB: What keeps me inspired is not letting someone creep up on me. To me, just when they think they have your number.....you have to always be a step ahead of everybody and makes sure nobody steals your idea and does better.

SW: Do you consider it a competitive process?

JB: It's a competition. I don't look at it as anything other than that. Because I'm friendly with a lot of people and a lot of my fellow artists, but to me it's like that cartoon with the sheep dog and the fox. We punch in, and after we punch in, were competitors. It's no big happy family for me.

SW: I like that approach. It's very sports-minded.

JB: I've done this for so long that I'm past the point of just being happy to be here among the crowd. I'm not looking for just the photo album at the end of the high school year. The goal is to make as many new fans as possible. There are some artists that probably think I'm too competitive and some artists that are probably wishing I would go away, but that just means to me that I'm doing something correct.

SW: Who do you consider to be some of your peers or competitors on the guitar?

JB: There are so many great ones, and there's so many that are better than me. There are so many great guitar players out there that play brilliant guitar but don't get half of the opportunities that I do or sell 1/3 of the records I do, but to me, they're way better guitar players. That just makes me want to work harder. They have God-given vocal ability and God-given talent and don't do as well, but for some reason, me being kind of stuck in the middle of it all, I'm able to make it work. There's a bunch of good guys out there. Just look at the blues chart. But I'm not competing with the guys on the blues chart. I'm competing with the guys on the pop chart. You have to compete with the whole world. This week, I just got the (Billboard) Chart, and the entire top 15 blues albums sold a total of 8,000 records (Bonamassa currently holds 2 of the top 15 places). To me, 8,000 records isn't enough. We have to think on a bigger scale. You have to think globally. How do we get a bigger audience involved in this thing?

SW: Along those lines, tell me about your "Blues In The Schools" program? I would think that would help in trying to accomplish what you were talking about.

JB: It's just something I do out of the goodness of my heart, to take the blues and roots-based music to kids. And I go in there and play for them, sing for them, and just see what happens.

SW: What advice would you offer youngsters who want to play the guitar?

JB: I would say to take some lessons and just get some formal training under your belt so that you have a base of knowledge. And then just listen to records and jam along to records and keep trying to be a sponge. Digesting as much music as you can digest, whether it's your favorite style or not, will help you in the long run. The more you digest, the more your main style becomes augmented by it.

SW: You share the same birthday with Robert Johnson, is that correct?

JB: And Richard Nixon, too. Yes.

SW: Those are two very important people. You started playing at such a young age. Have you ever stopped to think what else you might have been doing if you're weren't a musician?

JB: I don't know. That's a scary thought. I have a pretty good moral compass, so I'd probably be in Law Enforcement.

SW: You're only 30 years old, yet you're been playing for so many years. Are people surprised by your maturity as a player?

JB: Sometimes I'll be asked to go check some guitar player out, he's maybe 22 years old, and I think, OK, I've been playing guitar longer than you've been alive. But then sometimes I'll be very surprised at more mature they are (as a guitar player). And then I started thinking, well that's the way I was perceived. I think, if you can just prove yourself when you're around a bunch of seasoned guys, but don't be too eager to please. Just have your "A" game ready to go. At 30, I've hung around with some pretty heavy guys, and I've been extraordinarily lucky. And I think that gives me some credibility.

SW: What about your approach to cover songs? You've done a great job infusing your own style. "A New Day Yesterday" is a classic example. How do you go about selecting cover songs and how do you go about recoding once you've selected them?

JB: To me, you've got to pick a cover that hasn't been done before, or if it has, it hasn't been done good. I basically have no adherence to tradition or anything sacred. When I make a cover song, I'll just chop it up, I'll rearrange it, I'll use parts from another tune to make it work. Anybody can do a cover song, and anybody can do a verbatim version of whatever. You can buy the tablature. But to re-write it and to make it your own and put your own personality into it is something I've always had a little bit of a knack for. And that's how I choose my songs.

SW: Is there anything else that you can tell me about this tour?

JB: I'm just really looking forward to doing a gig with Sam Bush. It will be a fun night, kind of like a throw back to the old 60's bill, which is kind of cool.

SW: What are we going to see from Joe Bonamassa in the future?

JB: We're actually making a world blues album next year and we'll keep touring. We have gigs booked through October 2008. And then I'm going to take a break.

SW: Thank you again. I'm looking forward to the show.

EQUIPMENT

FOR SALE: 1938 Steinway, #290712 "L" grand, 5'10 1/2" mahogany. It was rebuilt in 1998. The rebuilding process included a new soundboard, wrest plank, tuning pins, and strings installed by Steinway and Sons and rebronzing the plate at the Steinway factory. M. Steinert & Sons then stripped and refinished the piano with six coats of hand rubbed lacquer. They also installed new action parts: hammers, hammer shanks and falnges, repetitions and damper felts using all genuine Steinway parts. They also installed new keytops and kep bushings. I have all the documentation to support this and the estimation of value to support my asking price - $37,000 Call 860-572-0056
